WELCOME TO WKND

MATT JULIA, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

We hate to admit it, but the summer is quickly coming to a close. There isn't much time left to enjoy the warm weather, so make the most of the final few weeks of the season. We've put together a nifty bucket list of all the things you have to do before we finally say goodbye to summer.

From lobster rolls by the beach to movies under the stars, you don't want to miss out on these traditions before pumpkin spice latte season kicks into gear.

ROUSEY ON WAHLBERG

I Fans will get to see a different side of Ronda Rousey in "Mile 22." We chatted with the athlete-turned-actress about teaming up with Mark Wahlberg for the new action flick and the evolution of her skills on the big screen. For more, see pages 6-7.

ROM-COM REMEDY

2 With everything going on in the world, we could all use a brief escape. Director Susan Johnson explains why her new Netflix rom-com "To All the Boys I've Loved Before" is just what the doctor ordered. For more, see pages 8-9.

SO LONG, SUMMER

3 Can you believe August is already halfway over? Don't let summer pass without checking items off our Boston bucket list. For more, see page 4.

THE END OF 'SHARKNADO'

4 Summer isn't the only thing coming to a close — so is Syfy's wacky but wildly popular "Sharknado" film series.

We've got all the details on the final flick and how to watch when it airs this weekend. For more, see page 12.

GO FOR GOLD

5 See Olympian Simone Biles and some of the best gymnasts in the nation show off their moves at the Garden this weekend. Get all the details on the championship and everything else going on in Boston. For more, see page 10.

Things you have to do in Boston before summer ends

Don't let the season end before checking off our bucket list. MATT JUUL

Catch a flick outdoors.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Say it isn't so! We're heading into the last few weeks of August, which means summer is rapidly coming to a close. With North Face and pumpkin spice latte season on the horizon, don't let the warm weather pass without enjoying all the great things the city has to offer. From lobster rolls by the beach to movies under the stars, here's our bucket list for spending the end of summer in Boston.

1 Feast on lobster rolls at Kelly's Roast Beef

If you haven't taken a trip out to Revere Beach, what are you waiting for? OK, we know the area gets a bad rap from time to time, but the trek is well worth it, if only to enjoy the legendary lobster rolls over at Kelly's Roast Beef. The eatery is a Massachusetts institution and no summer in the Bay State is complete without indulging on some tasty seafood.

2 Kayak along the Charles River

Take a relaxing ride down the Charles River before the warm weather leaves the city. If you don't have your own equipment, there are plenty of rental locations around the Hub, including spots in Allston, Kendall Square and Somerville. Get all the details on how to set up your end-of-summer kayak trip at paddleboston.com.

Take a relaxing trip along the Charles.

3 Enjoy a movie under the stars

There's no shortage of outdoor movie screenings around the city, so there's no excuse for skipping an evening of cinema under the stars. This weekend, catch "Tarzan" outdoors at the Prudential Center on Saturday, or Friday screenings of "Hook" at the Boston Harbor Hotel and "Beauty and the Beast" at the Hatch Shell. Check out a full breakdown of film at metro.us/things-to-do/boston/free-outdoor-movies-in-boston-2018.

4 Take a trip to Spectacle Island

Located just 20 minutes from downtown, this local island destination is just a ferry ride away. Make a trip over to Spectacle Island for a day of swimming by the beach, hiking scenic trails and so much more. Just make sure to stop by there soon, as it closes up shop on Columbus Day.

5 Sip away at beer gardens

Enjoying a few brews doesn't have to stop when summer ends, but there's nothing like sipping away at an outdoor beer garden. From Trillium on the Greenway to Aeronaut in Allston, there are a slew of great spots around town. Fans can check out two more hot spots courtesy of Night Shift, one by the Esplanade and another at Herter Park.

Ronda Rousey on the evolution of her acting, what she learned from Mark Wahlberg

The WWE superstar and former UFC champ opens up about her experience working on the new action flick "Mile 22."

matthew.juul@metro.us

As a WWE superstar and UFC Hall of Fame inductee, Ronda Rousey is used to tossing people around in the ring. Even in blockbusters like "Furious 7," "The Expendables 3" and the "Entourage" movie, Rousey's past big-screen roles have mostly featured her kicking butts and taking names. As you can imagine, the 31-year-old athlete-turned-actress is eager to try new things in the world of Hollywood, which is why she was so excited to work on "Mile 22."

Directed by Peter

"Mile 22" opens in theaters Aug. 17. MURRAY CLOSE/STX FILMS

Berg, the movie revolves around a secret U.S. tactical team that's been tasked with transporting a foreign asset out of Southeast Asia in order to obtain information vital to national security. While "Mile 22" still falls under the action genre, surprisingly, Rousey doesn't show off her hand-to-hand combat skills in the flick. Instead, those duties are left to her castmates Mark Wahlberg, "The Walking Dead" star Lauren Cohan, plus martial arts whiz and "The Raid" actor Iko Uwais.

Ahead of the film's release this weekend, we caught up with Rousey to chat about working with Wahlberg on "Mile 22," the evolution of her acting and more.

We surprisingly don't get to see any armbars or judo tosses from you in "Mile 22." Was it nice to showcase other aspects of your acting arsenal? I love being able to showcase my martial arts in any way, but that's also not all that I am capable of. I think that Pete definitely made the right call in this film. He said he wanted people to be surprised to even find out that it was me by the end of the film. He didn't want me doing anything like hand-to-hand fighting and [wanted me] purposefully outside of my comfort zone because he made it clear that he believes I am capable of so much more than just that. That belief was a huge responsibility. I set out to prove him right and I worked really, really hard on this film. I hope that it shows.

Since Berg and Wahlberg

both train in boxing and are big fight fans, did they pick your brain at all about the fight game or try to spar with you on set?

No, nobody tried to fight me on set. If anything, I was asking them. I was the student there. That's their arena and area of expertise, and I was the one absorbing all the information for them. Maybe they did learn something from me, I don't know. There wasn't much fighting for me to do in the film. I was mostly just trying to learn instead of teach.

You were pretty pumped to work with Wahlberg leading up to production. What kind of acting tips did you learn from him during this experience?

He's just such a great example of professionalism. He came every single day completely and totally prepared. It was impressive how many ... just pages and pages of dialogue he would have memorized, and be able to deliver them differently every time and still be able to improvise if Pete asked something completely different from him at the same time. I realized that I had no idea how amazing of an actor Mark Wahlberg is by the end of this film. He was a great example.

What goals do you hope to reach in Hollywood?

I just want to be able to show people that I can do much more than just fight. I also want to be able to contribute to stunts and choreography and that stuff as well because I am just so fascinated with it. I really feel like I have a lot to contribute, but also on the nonphysical side, I am so fascinated with it and have so much to learn. Any opportunity I'd be happy with, if anything was super physical, if anything was super drama or comedy or anything in between. I really love acting. It's something

I really enjoy and I'm extremely passionate about it. I would do it for free. I'm here because I love it and I really enjoy myself. I really hope that it shows and people enjoy themselves watching me.

Ronda Rousey learned a lot from Mark Wahlberg on "Mile 22." GETTY IMAGES

Were you able to contribute to the choreography behind the scenes at all?
Oh no, that's Iko's area of expertise. He is like the Olympic champion of fight choreography. His style is so entirely different from mine. I would really love to collaborate with him and maybe someday create a fight that's us against each other or us together as a team. I just think that the huge difference between how we fight is really fascinating. I think that any fight is kind of a heightened conversation. I think we would have some very interesting conversations together. That's one thing I hope people take away from this film. They come in expecting to see me and Iko to be fighting or fighting each other, and when they don't see it, I hope that people will be demanding it and want to see it and we'll get that chance sometime in the future.

From U.S.-Russian relations to surveillance, the film covers many important themes. Having worked on this project, does it make you worried at all about the world at large?
One thing that the movie does make me [think about] is surveillance in general, and how surveillance can be used for good and how it can be used for bad, and how it's something very dangerous that we need to handle delicately.

Why the world needs 'To All the Boys I've Loved Before' right now

Director Susan Johnson talks about her new Netflix film and the power of rom-coms. GREGORY WAKEMAN

"To All the Boys I've Loved Before" debuts on Netflix this weekend.

"To All the Boys I've Loved Before" director Susan Johnson has opened up about making a luscious and uplifting romantic-comedy that she hopes will allow viewers to escape the disarray of the modern world.

Based on the adored 2014 young-adult romantic novel from Jenny Han, "To All the Boys I've Loved Before" revolves around 16-year-old Lara Jean Song Covey (Lana Condor), who over the years has written love letters to all of her five past crushes, however, they were only meant for her own eyes. So when her younger sister posts them to each boy, Lana's world is thrown into chaos as they approach her one by one, which provokes Lana to explore her feelings, future and the budding romance inside of her.

A heart-warming coming-of-age tale, "To All the Boys I've Loved Before" is immediately reminiscent of classics of the genre, but since it's led by Asian-American actor Lana Condor, it still feels very vital and progressive as well.

Ultimately, though Johnson insists she "just wanted to make a movie where people could escape for 90 minutes," especially as "the world is in such disarray." In fact, Johnson believes the current struggles of the world have provoked a rom-com renaissance.

"If you think about the history of romantic comedies, look at World War II and the 1980s and the early '90s, when rom-coms were in their heyday," she says. "Here we are 25 years later, and that is always playing in my head when I am reading scripts and trying to pick what projects to do. I just want to give people hope and joy for a few minutes."

"Not every story has to be culturally significant, or change the world. Sometimes it is just entertainment and that is what I loved about the project," Johnson adds. "I wanted people to watch the film and go, 'Oh, hey, it is OK to be friends with my family, to have a good life. It is OK to put yourself out there.' Hopefully, people will re-examine their relationships."

Johnson is aided in this quest by Condor, who excels as Lara. It was an easy casting decision for Johnson to make, as she waxed lyrical about how "bright" the 21-year-old actress is, while insisting that

Condor still brought an integral "depth" to the character she "just wasn't seeing in other actors."

"Lara Jean has this innocence about her, but she also thinks that she has her s--- together. She has this certain way of doing things all the time," says Johnson. "Lana has this innate beauty. She is just an interesting person. She has an interesting background, her history is interesting, her life has been interesting. So she could just bring all of that into the room."

Syfy brings the ridiculous 'Sharknado' series to an end

"The Last Sharknado" airs Sunday, Aug. 19, at 8 p.m. on Syfy SYFY

The purposefully over-the-top television movie franchise pulls out all the stops for its sixth and final entry.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Author Steve Alten, whose book "Meg: A Novel of Deep Terror" inspired the Jason Statham giant shark movie, "The Meg," recently spoke to Metro about the possibility of its becoming a "billion-dollar franchise." Judging by the movie's box office so far, he's not wrong, but Alten is forgetting one thing.

A massively popular franchise about people fighting off killer sharks already exists, and it's called "Sharknado."

The first entry did OK when it premiered on Syfy, but Twitter trends and word of mouth quickly increased the 2013 film's profile — so much that subsequent airings and a brief theatrical release ensured at least one sequel would result.

Five years later, "The Last Sharknado: It's About Time," the sixth and final film by the B-movie powerhouse studio The Asylum, is set to premiere on Sunday.

Since 2013, a sequel ("Sharknado 2: The Second One," "Sharknado 3: Oh Hell No!," "Sharknado: The 4th Awakens" and "Sharknado 5: Global Swarming") has debuted every year on Syfy. And while each one has upped the ante, and the ridiculousness, to even greater heights, "The Last Sharknado" promises to be the silliest one yet.

Series regulars Tara Reid, Ian Ziering and Cassie Scerbo, who play April Shepard, Fin Shepard and Nova Clarke, are all back for the trio's final adventure, which sees them trying to reset history following the dystopian cliffhanger "Global Swarming" ended with. In other words, if the "It's About Time" subtitle wasn't a clue, then yes, the sixth "Sharknado" will involve time travel.

According to the official log line: "Our hero Fin (Ian Ziering) has battled sharks all over the globe, but in this last installment he will tackle the final shark-tier — time travel. In the ending moments of 'Sharknado 5: Global Swarming,' Fin was seen wandering alone on Earth after it was destroyed. Now he must travel back in time to stop the Sharknado that started it all. Will Fin and the gang be able to set everything right and save the world once and for all?"

Directed by Anthony C. Ferrante, who has directed all six TV movies, and written by "Sharknado 5" co-writer Scotty Mullen, Sunday's absurd conclusion pretty much takes all of the major facets employed by popular, genre-heavy superhero and science-fiction properties and mashes them together.

That being said, Ferrante and the principal cast revealed at the 2018 San Diego Comic-Con that "The Last Sharknado" will end much like the series finale of a TV show, with most of the major loose ends being tied up and all of the unanswered questions being addressed.

LET'S COOL DOWN ON THE GROUP TEXTS
OK, so Eric's surprise birthday party is next Wednesday and it's time to let the rest of your friends know if you're coming and what you will be bringing to Samantha's apartment. You've claimed the "chips and dip" portion of the Google Doc that has been circling back and forth among the group, but there are a few people who refuse to check it. Glenn fires off a quick group text to all of the people invited, pressuring people to speak up. There are a solid 20 phone numbers you don't recognize. Most of them keep silent, but the 15 people you do know chime in to the conversation. The problem is, people get sidetracked. Now every time you open your phone to give yourself that respite dopamine rush you need to break up the workday, you find 78 texts waiting for you. You scroll through to find no hard data. Just a bunch of emojis and inside jokes that you missed out on 35 texts ago. Oh, look, James just sent a video of a hippopotamus eating a watermelon in one bite. Is he bringing watermelon to the party? Is he bringing Hungry Hungry Hippos? What are we even talking about anymore? The point is, this is all supposed to be simple. We all know what is going on for this party. Do we really need the group chat anymore?

Aries Get involved in activities that require intelligence and motivation. A change regarding a partnership should be handled delicately. If someone overreacts, back away.

Taurus Change can be good, as long as it's carefully considered. Learn from the experts and handle each situation you face with diplomacy.

Gemini Trust in your feelings, not in what someone wants you to believe. Self-improvement will lift your spirits and encourage you to bring about positive change.

Cancer Make a change for the right reason. You may feel emotional about something that happens, but acting too quickly will cause a feud.

Leo Emotional situations will mount if you or someone else makes a last-minute change that disrupts plans. Keep the peace and choose kindness over criticism.

Virgo Take a fresh look at an old idea. A slight change will make the difference between stagnation and progress. Older and younger people will offer innovative solutions.

Libra You have plenty to offer, but don't let anyone take advantage of your generosity. You must know when to say no. Take better care of yourself.

Scorpio Emotions will be rumbling around in your head. Don't share with insensitive people who can't fully understand where you are coming from.

Sagittarius Count your money, tuck your possessions away somewhere safe and help only those who are truly in need. Focus on personal gains and time with a loved one.

Capricorn Make a difference by bringing about changes at home or work that will encourage others to pitch in and help.

Aquarius Past problems will surface if you get into an emotional discussion with someone who doesn't remember things the same way you do. Silence is golden.

Pisces Gains can be made if you use your skills to help yourself and the people counting on you. Share your thoughts, not your cash.

Reebok debuts shoe made from cotton and corn

The environment-friendly sneaker marks the first iteration of the Reebok sustainability line.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Looking to lead a greener life? You can take a step toward sustainability with a new shoe from Reebok made from cotton and corn.

Reebok, which is headquartered in Boston, has officially launched the first product in its new Cotton and Corn program, the sneaker company's sustainability products initiative.

The ethos of the environment-friendly program is to make footwear with "things that grow." That's instead of from things like petroleum- and oil-based products, which are "pulled from the ground, and once you use them, you can't ever use them again," Bill McInnis, head of Reebok Future, the company's innovation department, previously told Metro.

The first shoe in this sustainability initiative is the NPC UK Cotton and Corn sneaker, which officially launched this week.

The insoles are derived from castor bean oil, according to the company, and the footwear comes in packaging that is 100 percent recycled.

The NPC UK Cotton and Corn sneaker, which comes in unisex sizes and retails for $95, features an upper made from 100 percent cotton that is soft and flexible, and a corn-based sole that feels just as sturdy as any other sneaker's. The insoles are derived from castor bean oil, according to the company, and the footwear comes in packaging that is 100 percent recycled.

"The NPC UK Cotton + Corn is the only footwear product on the market that has been certified as containing 75 percent USDA certified biobased content," McInnis said in a statement. "And this is just the start for us. We are on an ongoing path to create a different type of footwear — so that you can feel good about what you're wearing and where it came from."

Long-term sustainability is the goal for Reebok, as the company looks to create an environment-friendly sneaker on a large scale.

When it comes to making sneakers out of petroleum, which is used to create synthetic rubber and foam cushioning, "With 20 billion pairs of shoes made every year, this is not a sustainable way of making footwear," McInnis explained in a statement.

But with cotton and corn shoes, made from things that grow and can be regrown, the company hopes a plant-based shoe can change not just the sneaker world, but Earth's sustainability overall.

A very important announcement for 7-Eleven lovers: Slurpee cookies exist

COURTESY OF 7-ELEVEN

In honor of Free Slurpee Week, 7-Eleven is offering "buy one, get one free" deals through this Sunday, Aug. 19. And, if you're a fan of the slush drinks and enjoy dessert (like, who doesn't?), you'll want to know about 7-Eleven's latest hit: Slurpee cookies.

These confections — Lofthouse sugar cookies — are topped with cherry Slurpee frosting as an ode to the treat.

Food blogger JunkFoodMom first Instagrammed these last week. She posted an update Wednesday about the taste, writing, "Found these a few days ago and was hesitant to try them.

"I'm glad I dived in ... these are very good."

User post

I figured they'd be sickly sweet. Well I'm glad I dived in because these are actually very good!"

She continued on to say they taste just like the cherry drink, adding, "They are not overly sweet like most of these type of cookies. The frosting is fairly thick but is perfectly balanced with the soft cookie. I like 'em!"

The blogger also promised that if you're a fan of the refreshment, you need to give them a try.

"Tried these, there [sic] pretty good!" another user wrote on the first post about the cookies.

The cookies come in a pack of 10, and the packaging features the iconic Slurpee logo.

The company told Metro that the cookies are being sold for a limited time in participating locations nationwide. It's the first year 7-Eleven is offering Lofthouse cookies in this flavor.

The chain created Slurpee doughnuts back in 2016 for the drink's 50th anniversary. We'd vote for Slurpee-inspired croissants next. SAMI BRODSKY

MBTA unveils new Red Line train car design

A mock-up of the new Red Line train cars that will soon grace MBTA rails is currently at City Hall Plaza.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Officials have revealed the new Red Line train designs, and you can peek inside before they hit the rails.

A mock-up of the new Red Line train debuted at City Hall Plaza this week and will be on display through Thursday.

Gov. Charlie Baker, Massachusetts Transportation Secretary and CEO Stephanie Pollack, MBTA General Manager Luis Ramirez and others toured the train on Tuesday, and the public can step inside as well between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. while it's in City Hall Plaza.

Gov. Charlie Baker spoke Tuesday at a ribbon cutting for a model of a new Red Line car. CHRIS TRIUNFO / SHNS

The updated Red Line train design is expected to be on MBTA tracks for testing by March of next year. The revamp is part of an initiative to improve the MBTA overall.

"New fleet vehicles are just one of the many investments being made by the Baker-Polito administration to improve the customer experience and improve service," Pollack said in a statement. "The MBTA is investing nearly $2 billion in the Red Line/Orange Line Improvement Program, which includes procuring these new Red Line vehicles. The upcoming new fleet for the Red Line, coupled with new and improved track, signals, and other core infrastructure upgrades translates to a better, more reliable service for MBTA customers."

The MBTA's Red and Orange Lines are the two most heavily traveled lines within the transit system, Ramirez said at the ribbon cutting for the new Red Line train, per State House News Service.

Some current Red Line trains date back to the 1970s, but soon, the line will get 252 new vehicles.

Stephanie Pollack, Massachusetts Transportation Secretary and CEO

The mock-up at City Hall Plaza is two-thirds the size of the actual new Red Line train cars, officials said, but still showcases the updates to come.

The China Railway Rolling Stock Corp. has been contracted to build the new Red Line train vehicles, which are being assembled in a manufacturing facility in train door, dedicated accessibility areas and advanced audio and visual technology to dispense information to riders.

The Red Line trains will also have technology-enhanced signage and emergency intercom units, and are equipped with modern propulsion and braking systems, which officials say will reduce rider wait times.

What to know about this year's Burning Man festival

The legendary arts and communal-thinking fest returns to the Nevada desert later this month.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Out in the Nevada desert, a small utopia has been created by people who wish to shed the social, cultural and financial constructs of our organized society. Oh yes, it's time for these people to make their pilgrimage to Black Rock City for Burning Man 2018, the long-running arts and communal-thinking festival. Located 100 miles outside of Reno, Burning Man started in 1986 as a way for people to explore artistic expression and radical self-reliance. It has become most famous for the way the "community" operates during the weeklong event, as people who choose to camp on the grounds will live by a bartering and gifting system for food and goods throughout the festival, relying on the generosity of fellow festivalgoers. Here is what you need to know about this year's Burning Man festival.

When is Burning Man?
Burning Man will start on Aug. 26 and run until Sept. 3.

How do you get to Burning Man?

Since Black Rock City is a temporarily erected destination solely used for the event, finding its exact location can be a little tricky for some festivalgoers. The exact GPS coordinates for Burning Man 2018 in Black Rock City are 40°45'13.83 N, 119°16'37.20 W. But for those who don't read maps as well as others, what are the brass tacks for traveling to this festival?

A common way for many to travel to the event is to fly to Reno and drive in. To do this, you can take Highway I-80 east for 28 miles. Take the Wadsworth/Pyramid Lake exit, No. 43. You can get gas here. Then, go north 1 mile to Wadsworth and turn left, staying on Highway 447. It's 78 miles to Gerlach, and then 8 miles north on state Route 34 to BRC. The other option is Highway I-80 east for 4 miles. Take the Pyramid Way exit, No. 18, to Hwy 445. Turn left and go north 31 miles. At Pyramid Lake, turn right on Highway 446 and go east 12 miles to Nixon. You can get gas here. Turn left on Highway 447, traveling north, 54 miles to Gerlach, and then 8 miles north on state Route 34 to BRC.

Just be warned that Highway 447 is a two-lane rural highway and the festival expects over 60,000 Burners each year driving in and out of the festival. It might be in your best interest to get there early to beat the traffic!

How do you prepare for Burning Man?

The key to surviving such a radical event like Burning Man is to really understand what comforts you will be giving up during your time at the festival. By realizing that things like a warm shower, a comfortable bathroom, a quick and easy meal, or just a supermarket that you can pop into when your everyday essentials have been drained will no longer be there, the better off you will be. Make sure to bring enough food and water to get you through the week, but also make peace with packing minimally and relying on others to help you get through your trip. Burning Man has also set up year-round events called "local burns" in different parts of the world to get you in the mindset of the festival.

How much are tickets to Burning Man?

While the ticket registration has officially closed for Burning Man 2018, there are other ways you can find tickets to this festival online through secondhand ticket sites like StubHub. Just be warned, they might cost you a pretty penny, as some tickets have reached over $1,300.

Jets running back Isaiah Crowell might be an underrated backfield option who could yield some solid points for you in your fantasy league. GETTY IMAGES

FANTASY FOOTBALL DRAFT: LOOKING FOR GREAT VALUE

FANTASY SPORTS

BILL DUBIEL

Welcome back, fantasy football fans! With the preseason underway, it's time to start getting ready to chase another championship. Don't forget to check out Rotoballer.com for all of the tools you need to get the edge on your league mates.

Can't ignore Cook's sky-high ceiling

The big factor that will help Dalvin Cook step forward is going to be how much Cook improves in the passing game. He only saw 15 targets in his four games, but he hauled 11 of those in for 90 yards. Obviously, Cook was not the primary passing-down back last year (that was Jerick McKinnon's role), and so it's certainly not fair to write off any receiving production that he might add. It's a borderline guarantee that he will rack up 400 receiving yards in 2018, as the only real competition for snaps he has is Latavius Murray. Cook is the clear workhorse in that offense, and he'll be on the field for a majority of snaps in all situations. It's perfectly possible that they use Murray as the goal line back, but Cook will more than make up for any losses there with his dominance of passing-down snaps.

Roll the dice on Crowell

Isaiah Crowell's situation is actually pretty similar to Dalvin Cook's in that his next big leap is predicated on him taking a step forward in the passing game. Whether it's Josh McCown, Teddy Bridgewater or Sam Darnold under center for the Jets, the offense isn't going to be considered high-flying by any means. The Jets will be focused on controlling the ball on offense, and that means plenty of action for the running backs. Bilal Powell will certainly still be a factor, but if Crowell can continue to prove his capability in the passing game — like he did with a 16-yard catch-and-run for a TD in the Jets preseason opener — then he should have no problem assuming the lion's share of the touches in that backfield. I don't believe he has an RB1 ceiling by any means, but at his current ADP (RB35, 85 overall) he should be a great value pick in the seventh or eighth round of your fantasy drafts regardless of what format you play in.

Too many Cooks in the kitchen

I don't think it's too much to assume that Kerryon Johnson is the most talented back in the Detroit backfield. The Lions took him in the second round of this year's draft, and any skill player with that much draft capital attached to him is a near-lock to be a key part of future plans. However, I don't see Johnson assuming that key role in 2018.

While they invested draft capital on Johnson, the Lions also signed early-down bruiser LeGarrette Blount in the off-season and he certainly isn't on the team to ride the pine. They've also kept Theo Riddick locked into a roster spot, as he's been a key to their offense on passing downs in recent years. With Blount on the field for early downs and Riddick on the field for passing downs, where does the volume come from for Johnson? He'll definitely get the opportunity to show his stuff this season, but if that's 10 to 12 inconsistent touches a game, he's simply not worth the draft day investment. In Round 6 or 7, take a guy with higher upside like Marlon Mack, Robert Woods, Cooper Kupp, or the aforementioned Crowell.

What to watch for as Pats face Eagles

In preseason action, the Patriots take on the team that beat them in Super Bowl LII.

MATT BURKE
matt.burke@metro.us

Here are three things to watch for Thursday (7:30 p.m., WBZ) in a "Super Bowl rematch" between the Pats and Eagles at Gillette Stadium.

1 All eyes on Brady

Tom Brady is expected to play on Thursday against the Eagles, and it will be interesting to see how long Bill Belichick leaves him on the field. Brady made his preseason debut in the second week of exhibition season last year and threw nine passes. It's likely that he'll play the entire first half Thursday.

What will also be interesting to watch Thursday night is if Brady finally shakes the hand of Super Bowl MVP Nick Foles after the game. Brady quickly walked off the field in Minneapolis this past February without acknowledging Foles.

This story hasn't been

The Pats defense will get another look at Nick Foles and the Eagles Thursday night in Foxboro. GETTY IMAGES on the radar much here (we've been preoccupied with other Pats drama). But in Philly, it remains a big deal.

"It will happen when it happens," Foles said this week regarding the handshake. "We practiced with the Patriots several years ago, and I got to stand there and talk to Tom for quite a bit. He's a great guy. I have all the respect in the world for him."

2 Try to keep up, defense

The Pats defense was famously torched by Foles in Super Bowl LII, and they'll get another look at the Eagles signal-caller Thursday.

The Patriots more recently got torched by a career backup last Thursday, when Colt McCoy completed 13 of 18 passes for 189 yards and two touchdowns with zero picks. So, needless to say, it would be nice if the defense gave some peace of mind to fans for a change. This is a D that not only let Foles exploit them in February but also made Blake Bortles look good in the AFC title game. It's been a while since anyone around here has had any faith in this group.

Derek Rivers and Adrian Clayborn looked strong in the Redskins game, putting some pressure on the quarterback. But there was generally more bad than good as Kyle Van Noy and Stephon Gilmore both looked out of sorts.

3 Creating stars

The Patriots once made Wes Welker into a star. Same for Dion Lewis, to a lesser extent.

So who is the next dude to see his stock soar?

Former Bengals running back Jeremy Hill had a strong debut for the Pats against Washington as he led the team in yards on the ground with 51. Ralph Webb, the undrafted free agent out of Vanderbilt, also had a strong performance out of the backfield as he found the end zone twice and had 46 yards rushing.

The Patriots' top three receivers against the Redskins were as follows: Devin Lucien (has bounced around the league since being drafted in the seventh round in 2016), Cordarrelle Patterson (thought to be mainly a special teams star), and Ryan "Don't call me Larry" Izzo. It's doubtful all three prove to be big performers for the Pats this year, but maybe one of them continues to step up?
